For the 2026/27 school year, a further 102 schools in Baden-Württemberg will start as all-day schools. These include 81 primary schools, 16 special education and counselling centres (SBBZ), a secondary school and four grammar schools. This was announced by Minister of Education Theresa Schopper on Thursday, 12 March.

"All-day school stands for individual support, additional learning times and a diverse educational offer that combines lessons, rest and practice phases, but also sports, music and creativity in a meaningful way," emphasized Minister Schopper. "All-day schools are a central building block for more educational justice. In addition, they make it easier for parents to reconcile family and career. “

Of 97 primary schools and SBBZs, 76 have opted for the elective form in which parents can decide whether their child participates in the all-day operation of the school. At 21 primary schools and SBBZs, the mandatory form will be set up in which all children participate in all-day schooling. The state has also created the possibility of setting up all-day schools on five days. A primary school in the Main-Tauber district has now chosen this time model for the first time in Baden-Württemberg.

Legal entitlement comes into force

With a view to the coming school year, Minister of Education Schopper referred to the gradual legal entitlement to all-day support for children of primary school age. From 2026/27, it will initially apply to first-graders and will grow up to grade 4 in the following years. "The state stands by its responsibility and supports the sponsors to the best of its ability," Schopper underlined.

This is because the schools will receive additional teacher hours per week for all-day operation. They also have the option of converting part of it into funds. 43 primary schools and 9 SBBZs want to use this opportunity to integrate extracurricular partners into the school's pedagogical concept and to finance offers from music schools, sports clubs or other partners.

The state promotes all-day education and care services in Baden-Württemberg

With the inclusion of federal funds, the state will in future assume 68 percent of the calculated operating costs for care services that meet legal entitlements.

In addition to all-day schools, there are also after-school care centres in Baden-Württemberg as well as flexible childcare services from municipal or independent providers. The municipalities set up the flexible childcare services required in each case according to the local needs. The state, municipalities and independent providers see the fulfilment of the all-day entitlement as a common challenge, to which all partners contribute their part in order to provide the best possible offers for all-day education and care for primary school children.

The expansion of all-day schools is progressing continuously

Around 8000 new places have been created in the state with this year's new all-day schools from the next school year. In addition, there are the schools that have been set up in recent years and are gradually growing up.

From the next school year, there will be a total of 1,078 all-day schools in primary education in Baden-Württemberg. The school offer is supplemented by numerous flexible care offers from municipal or independent providers as well as after-school care centres.
